Hi Richard

Perhaps you can give me a call regarding the above. I have looked at the WSCC comments and they appear be based on wrong assumptions. Mr Bartlett starts by guessing that soil is taken from the adjacent housing development which is not the case. The hedge which bounded the site was indeed ripped out by the developers of the adjacent site and this prompted my client to construct the bund as both a means of enclosure and to provide screening from the new development. The soil was scraped from immediately adjacent area on my clients land to a depth of around 75mm and pushed up to form the small bund.

Perhaps you would call me later to discuss this matter. I will be away next week for half term but can speak this week or after 24th Feb on 07710 381083.

Regards
David
