Archaeological Assessment

The information in the HER maps and reports in this appendix has been considered, along with the 1840 Tythe map and historic Ordnance Survey mapping.

There are no HER points within the site. The only HER points within 500m are a 19th century railway building and a 20th century brickworks. There are no existing buildings or physical features to suggest any prior use of the site other than agriculture/horticulture. There is no historic cartographic evidence of any historic buildings or uses other than agriculture/horticulture.

As with all land in this part of the coastal plain, and further afield, there is the potential for prehistoric remains but there is nothing in the records to suggest that these would be significant.

If the Local Planning Authority on consultation with West Sussex County Council Archaeologists consider that there is any significant archaeological interest that might be harmed by residential development then a condition requiring a pre construction archaeological survey would be appropriate.

Features and finds dated to the prehistoric, Middle-Late Bronze Age, Iron Age, Roman, Saxon/Norman, Medieval and Postmedieval were found on this site. Features include mainly ditches, and finds include flintwork and pottery, and a LBA posthole containing flintwork, and fire cracked flint. A significant quantity of LBA to EIA pottery was recovered within the surrounding area. To the south a large number of archaeological features were discovered dating from the Late Bronze Age to the Late Medieval period. A layer of occupation debris was recorded sealing another possible ditch/gully and a large pit. One pit contained worked flint and a single small sherd of Bronze Age pottery, whilst the remaining pits contained medieval pottery. Another area revealed more features all dated to the Saxo-Norman and later medieval periods.

Name: Site of the Medieval Chapel at Lidsey, AldingbourneGrade: AmberDate Assigned*Amended: 18/09/2013Revoked:*Legal Description

There was a chapel at Lidsey in 1282, services were still held there in 1544. It was out of use by 1583. A group of buildings shown on Yeakell and Gardner's map of 1778 may represent the chapel site. The field is under permanent pasture and ground disturbance indicates the existence of former buildings. Much glass and stone has been found in the surrounding area, which would seem a more likely site for the chapel.

Legal Description

St. George's Church, Eastergate, has Norman walling but with Roman tile and brick built into the S. wall of the nave. C14 in the nave, three-light C15 at the E end, three-light C15 at the W end - built with a bequest of 1534, and already with simple arched and uncusped heads. Two evaluation trenches revealed the presence of two adjacent north-south ditches, the more substantial of which contained pottery of 11th-13th century date. These may represent earlier churchyard boundaries c. 2-3m east of the present churchyard wall.

Curatorial Notes

RED – Presumption for Pre-Determination work. More archaeological information needs to be gathered from archaeological fieldwork before determination.

Very sensitive area for Archaeology, with possibility of unacceptable significant adverse archaeological development impact. Consult archaeological adviser for advice.

Description and Sources

Description

St. George's Church, Eastergate, has Norman walling but with Roman tile and brick built into the S. wall of the nave. {1}{2}

For a possible villa site nearby see 1406.

St George. Nave, chancel and frilly C19 bell-turret, but too heavily restored to be attractive. The walling probably entirely Norman - see the herringbone masonry on the S side of the chancel, and a narrow primitive window on the N side. Later windows, more or less renewed: C14 in the nave, three-light C15 at the E end, three-light C15 at the W end - built with a bequest of 1534, and already with simple arched and uncusped heads. {3}

Description and Sources

Description

Many fragments of Romano-British pottery (coarse ware, sherds of New Forest Ware, possible fragments of tegula), some animal bone and oyster shells were found in 1952, on the surface of a ploughed field to the South of St. Georges Church, Eastergate. In 1962, the site was within a field under grass and nothing further was found. However, Roman tile was found in the ploughed field immediately to the North. Further finds of Roman tile were made in 1971, together with some Medieval pottery (see 1407). A cropmark on the RAF Aerial Photograph 60802 (dated 1925) shows a crop/soil mark where the finds were made, possibly indicating a villa site. Although the farmer was unaware of the site and had made no further finds, he stated that the crops in the area showed poor growth, suggesting buried foundations. In 1986, it was noted that St Georges Church, Eastergate (1266), to the North of the site, has a large quantity of Roman tile built into the South wall of the nave (said to be Norman), including apparently complete tegulae {1}

Crop mark of a possible Roman villa and tile built into the church.{2}

Romano-British Pottery found AD. 1952. Area centred SU 9464 0463. Many fragments of R.B. coarse ware, sherds of New Forest ware, possible fragments of tegula, some animal bone and oyster shells were found on the surface of a ploughed field to the south of St. George's Church, Eastergate. The above siting falls within a field at present under grass and nothing further was found, but Ro. tile is to be found in the ploughed field immediately to the N. Further finds of Roman tile were made in the area at the time of investigation together with some Md glazed pottery. The RAF AP dated 1925 shows a crop/soil mark where the finds were made, indicating a possible villa site. Although the farmer was unaware of the site, and had made no further finds, he stated that the crops in the area showed poor growth, suggestive of buried foundations. {3}

CHAPEL (Medieval to Post Medieval - 1200 AD to 1599 AD)

Evidence DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE

Description and SourcesDescription

There was a chapel at Lidsey in 1282, services were still held there in 1544. It was out of use by 1583.^{1} During the building of the school at Bersted in 1884 some of the stone used came from a house, Headhone House, pulled down in a field called the Headhone (shown at SU93680335 on the tithe map for Aldingbourne, 1846). This included several pieces of Early English architecture, a font and a corbel. It is not likely that the stones were brought from far for reuse in the house. In 692 King Nothelm made grants to his sister, Nothgitha, of land at Lidsey and Aldingbourne for building a monastery and a church.^{2} A group of buildings is shown at SU93970348 on Yeakell and Gardner's map of 1778 which may represent the chapel site.^{3} The field is under permanent pasture and ground disturbance indicates the existence of former buildings. No significant finds have been found there, but at SU94600245 much glass and stone has been found in a small field standing above the surrounding area, which would seem a more likely site for the chapel.^{4} See also 4953.

DITCH (Medieval - 1066 AD to 1539 AD)

Description and SourcesDescription

Two evaluation trenches revealed the presence of two adjacent north-south ditches, the more substantial of which contained pottery of 11th-13th century date. These may represent earlier churchyard boundaries c. 2-3m east of the present churchyard wall.

Two further parallel linear features, aligned east-west, probably confirm the position of a post-medieval field boundary/drain and a more recent garden boundary.

The presence of burnt and worked flint indicate a probable prehistoric activity in the area. A single fragment of tegula was recovered from the subsoil. (1)

Description and Sources

Description

Eleven trenches were excavated to a cumulative length of 145 metres. Archaeological features were discovered across the site, and particularly in trenches 1 and 2.

An area of 50 metres squared was opened around trenches 1 and 2. The excavation around trench 2 revealed a series of features dating to the medieval period (11th - 14th Centuries). A curvilinear gully/ditch was traced and one terminal end was seen. To the south, a layer of possible occupation debris was recorded sealing another possible ditch/gully and a large pit. One pit contained worked flint and a single small sherd of Bronze Age pottery, whilst the remaining pits contained medieval pottery. The area opened around trench 1 revealed more features all dated to the Saxo-Norman and later medieval periods. One feature contained small sherds of residual prehistoric pottery.

Trench 11, 7 metres in length, was cut to trace the alignment of a large ditch uncovered in trench 7. Finds recovered from Trench 7 date to the 12th or early 13th Century. A piece of Roman pottery was also retrieved. Trench 11 was successful in locating the continuation of this ditch.

Subsequently, an additional area (c. 162 metres squared) was opened beneath the old Caretaker's Lodge, linking the areas around trenches 1 and 2. This area contained further features dating to the medieval period. Five linear features, four pits and five postholes were excavated. Refuse pits and an occupation layer provides further evidence that this part of the site may once have been occupied.

Although the samples taken have confirmed the presence of environmental remains, botanical remains are limited and there is strong evidence for modern disturbance within the samples. These samples therefore hold no potential for further analysis. {1}
