Hornbeam, Oak and Yew in rear garden

Dear Mr Patel

The Hornbeam that is on your eastern boundary has encroached over your neighbours property and has 2 or 3 long trunks growing in an North easterly direction probably due to prevailing weather as close to coast. I would recommend a reduction of these stems by 4 metres and the pruning back of lateral branches away from the house and your neighbours garden by 2 metres and generally leaving the side that faces the prevailing wind with a light reduction lower down but none higher up.

The Yew bushes that have been shaped over the years need to be hedge cut by a matter of a few inches just to keep them in good shape.

The Oak next to the Hornbeam is growing away from the prevailing winds and could do with a light pruning of about 1 metre to stop the encroachment of the canopy towards the house.

There is another Yew that is growing under the Hornbeam and Oak canopies that has got leggy as well as showing lack of light induced dieback which would benefit from 2 or 3 metres taken off the height which would encourage stronger growth especially if permission is given to reduce the surrounding trees and let more light in.

Yours Sincerely
