Dear Ms Oldfield,

Following our previous email I contacted Richard Martin of Parks and Landscape for further advice on whether the Arboriculturalist could revisit the tree in question. He contacted the Arboriculturalist and I copy and paste the reply below.

'From what I saw (tree not in leaf) I would stand by my recommendation of pruning rather than felling. However, if they are aggrieved by this then I suggest they come back in with a fresh felling application next summer when the tree is in full leaf and we can fully assess vigour and vitality.'

I also received this email today with further comments:

'I am happy for a tree surgeon to conduct a climbing inspection and send me some photo's if it is felt I have missed something in the crown – given that my inspection was from ground level. Notwithstanding anything by way of evidence coming back in on this basis I would stick with my recommendation to refuse – as I feel the tree can be retained and made safe by pruning. I would however be prepared to look at this again next Spring when the tree comes into leaf as it is not possible at this time of year to accurately gauge tree vigour and vitality.'

Thank you

Amber Willard

Dear Ms Willard

Thank you so much for coming back to me. I have spoken to my neighbour and we still do have all the diseased wood. If it is possible for a revisit when we are at home that would be great. My Mobile is [REDACTED]

Many Thanks
Kirstin
