I object to planning application A/64/18/T the felling of two beech trees on the new Audi garage site on the A259, Angmering. These trees are said to be damaged so significantly that their health has been damaged. Although I am no expert, I think it is clear that these trees have limited damage and will very likely survive and continue to grow if they are left alone. Our natural world is very tenacious, when shielded from negative human impact, as is evident if you have ever come across an abandoned human site or settlement; nature swiftly reclaims the land, if allowed. The threatened beech trees should be left to recover for at least a year before a decision is made over their fate. Trees play such a vital role in life on earth and rather than the attitude of, 'just one or trees won't be missed', how about saying, 'I helped save two beautiful, established, life giving trees'? Planting new trees is fantastic but it will years before their root system and canopy will be providing what an established tree provides. Do you make decisions such as the felling of these two established beech trees (a seemly small part to play in the natural world) and then watch and admire David Attenborough on a Sunday evening? Please make the right decision, rather than a decision based on money.

Yours sincerely,
Jennifer Chapman
