

The Honey Pot Arboricultural assessment

Tree is a large Holm Oak in the grounds of the Angmering Manor hotel.

Its very mature and has some poorly applied bracing of some description in the crown which appears to be redundant. There is dead wood in the crown.

The application is to remove the lowest two limbs back to the boundary line. It appears the similar works has been carried out on the tree for a neighbouring property.

As the are large limbs cutting back to the stem could be detrimental to the trees health, as it would result in large cavitys forming,

This way the tree will put out new growth at the end of the branch, which is the habit of the species.
