Hi

I object to the planning permission of an extension because he has already erected a very large summer house at the end of his garden that he is putting power into that looks into my garden & house. He has also done a loft conversion that doesn't have the legal strengthening beams under the flooring or fire doors. So I don't believe that he will keep the extension to any restrictions imposed. The noise of constant building work has been unbearable for over a year and he used my property as access for large items by going into my garden without permission and taking down my fence panels and weakening them. He is also propping up materials against the fencing which is also weakening the panels.

Firstly yet more excessive building noise on top of the last years constant building work, secondly the access to dig the footings etc,. They have already taken down fence panels of mine which has weakened it, to get a fish tank in the house, so to get access for other things such as materials, rubbish in and out etc would be difficult. I have in the past had strangers in my garden without permission so am concerned that I will have people on my property and my fencing taken down and weakened more without my permission.
