Hi Julie

The red edged is the building itself and the extent of the proposed decking which is correctly shown on the two smaller insets to that drawing.

The location plan on a Listed Building application still requires a red edge to identify the site area.

Is the red building your red edge?

Thanks

Julie

Hi Julie

I think we are all getting confused due to the number of applications that have been submitted. As the applications for Mill Thatch and Mill Cottage as Listed Building applications only and not planning applications, we do not need to show any 'curtilage'. When we submit a planning application we will.

I think I responded to you on Mill Cottage when you were asking about Mill Thatch so I do apologise.

DGC21815-MC10 Site_Block Plan.pdf which relates to Mill Thatch and includes a decked area outside the envelope of the building because it would be abutting the listed building thus needing Listed Building Consent.

Do you still require other land edged in blue?

Thank you for your email. I presume in your email below that you are in fact referring to CM/20/18/PL as this application number is CM/22/18/L?

Application CM/20/18/PL drawing 1 shows the site area edged in red. This is what needs to be shown on this Listed Building application. Or is the site area the building only (it usually includes some curtilage which is why its thrown me). The new plan attached now shows a completely different building in red. Is this correct? If so, the floor plans do not match the footprint.

I would be grateful if you could clarify,

Regards

Julie

Dear Sir/ Madam

Please note that all drawings on DGC-21815-MC10 Site_Block Plan were clearly indicated with a scale. The side margin text in the box was incorrect. I have drawn a line through that and attached drawing - DGC-21815-MC10 Site_Block Plan Rev A.pdf. In the drawing the subject building is clearly identified and you will note it provides a site location plan at 1:1250 and 1:500. This format was accepted for CM_22_18_L on the same site but relating to a different building.

Please note that was a change to the legislation which meant that applicants no longer needed to outline other land that they own or have an interest in with a blue line. This was not requested in respect of CM_22_18_L.

In the exercising of consistency can you confirm this is satisfactory.
