Hi Daun

Please can you confirm the additional fee for the container application is still as you previously said £718 so I can pay this. Also the length of time for temporary should be until all construction and repair works are complete.

Many thanks
Sarah

As long as it takes to get a planning permission!

Please advise me what longest period can be to be considered temporary so we can cover ourselves in case it takes a while to get a planning approval..

Good Morning Sarah

With reference to your email below and on advice of Juan Baeza, Team Leader for the area, it is the opinion of the Council that planning permission is required for the siting of the containers. The type of application required is dependent on the siting in relation to residential curtilage. To qualify as a Householder application the containers must be wholly within the defined residential curtilage. Any container sited outside of the residential curtilage (wholly or partially) would require a full planning application to be submitted. To relocate the containers without the benefit of planning permission would constitute a breach of planning control and of the planning injunction.

Regards

Hi Tracey thanks for talking with me yesterday. I have spoken with martyn and he confirms that the roofing works to mill cottage are included in the mill cottage LBC approval and from his perspective everything on the drawings are what is approved so I think I'm clear on that unless you have other information to the contrary.

You were going to check a couple of things for me and I wondered if you had managed to get a response on what Application if any is required if the containers are moved and all 5 are within the red line of 2015 cle? Whilst I want to recommend to Gary we do the full plans application as you and I discussed, I do want to be able to advise him on this scenario.

Many thanks
Sarah
