Dear Anita

Further to my previous email I now attach some photos which clearly show how out of keeping the existing rendered wall would be if it were to be approved to remain!

I would also like to point out that as it was part of the existing house that has since been demolished, the remaining wall is not structurally sound. There are significant cracks to this wall that have only appeared since the demolition of the house. The developers suggestion to re render will only mask the issue and be a maintenance issue for both the old forge and forge house going forward.
