Dear Jacqueline

Re: The large Monteray Pine trees in your rear garden

The reason for my visit was due to a large dead limb falling from one of the trees. It is common for these trees to have inner canopy die back and as a result, have large dead limbs, which in time will fall off.

The tree which recently shed a large limb has a much thinner canopy than the other two trees. To remove the threat of dead limbs dropping, I would recommend that the major dead limbs are removed from the Monteray Pines. This may be something that will need doing every few years.

I also recommend that the tree which recently lost a large limb is reviewed in a couple of years to check on its health. If there is upper canopy die back the tree may have structural problems.

If you have any queries please do not hesitate to contact me.
