Dear Anna

Of course -- its Wednesdays not Thursdays!

Ok, I think we may contact Ian (Nightman) next Wednesday if we can while I am on leave.

Thank you again!

Regards,

Jason

Dear Jason,

Mr. Wightman visits the Council offices on a Wednesday, so he will not be here until next week. I will forward your comment to him, but he will not be in a position to provide a response until the middle of next week. A reduction in the length of the extension in addition to justification is being sought so it is likely your client will need to consider this possibility further.

Dear Anita

Thank you for organising Ian Wightmans response.

Reading through his comments we indeed would like the opportunity to substantiate the scale of the extension in terms of the accommodation in respect to the imposed utility

I have attached a plan extract with the room names on for ease of reference.

The need for a proper utility room is largely borne out of the fact that the client is losing an existing, much used large larder and kitchen equipment room store. The space for this can again be hidden away in its own space if housed in the proposed utility room.

During the design process we did look into putting the new utility room in the existing house - the library and existing kitchen, but these two spaces are too good and important to the existing house design complexity to become the utility for the following reasons:-

The library has rather wonderful paneled walls with bespoke bookcases and complex ceiling structure. Books are a very important element of the home and this room is a wonderful feature of the house. This is highly valued and will continue to be used as the library and music room. This makes the library an unsuitable option

The existing kitchen space is to become the back hall and is the only thoroughfare through the main house to the new kitchen extension. Making this space into a utility room would be an unfeasible and impractically designed feature and would compromise the current, composite design features of the house and therefore would be unacceptable, the client understandably did not wish to fill it with utility units

Rooms such as the second bedroom are already being used as other rooms for ironing etc and combined with the above reasons, we believed this substantiated the need to position the new utility in the new extension out of the existing house.

I understand that Dr Wightman is at Arun today. I would be grateful if you could please relay our comments to him as substantiation for the proposed utility in the position shown and of course welcome the opportunity to discuss it further if he feels necessary.

Kind regards

Jason

Dear Jason,
I attach Ian Wightman's comments for your information.
Accordingly, without prejudice, I would welcome receipt of amended plans reducing the length of the extension by approx. 2.5 metres. It would also be useful if the extract of the proposed ground floor plan could indicate the proposed uses of the ex. dining room, kitchen and library.

Regards
Anna Gardner
