Morning Michael

Yes, I think so. I'm slightly nervous that piecemeal development and financial constraints might discourage final production of a synthesis of all the results. I think it's important and appropriate that their landscape wide significance is presented as such.

Best wishes,

James

Hi James,

In that case, could we partly discharge Condition 40 in terms of the development on Parcels A2 and B6 at Hampton Park?

Kind regards,

Michael

Hello Michael

I have just submitted my response to this one, as follows:

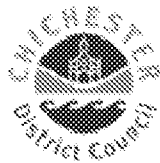

I can confirm that the archaeological investigation of this site has been satisfactorily completed and that condition 40 may therefore be discharged. However, we await a report on the results of the investigation of a significant part of the site.

Rereading it I think I've probably been less than clear. The issue is that we have a single condition covering a number of different 'sites'. The current situation as I believe it to be is that all the fieldwork is complete, that we have a final report from one contractor for a large chunk of the land to the north of Toddington Lane, are waiting for a report from another contractor for the rest of it, and now have a post excavation assessment and updated project design report (from the second contractor) for the Fairhaven Nursery and allotments site. Ultimately a version of the results of all three, i.e. everything covered by the original condition, will need to be incorporated in a single, published report.

Please let me know if you need anything else.

Best wishes,

James
