Dear Mr Davis

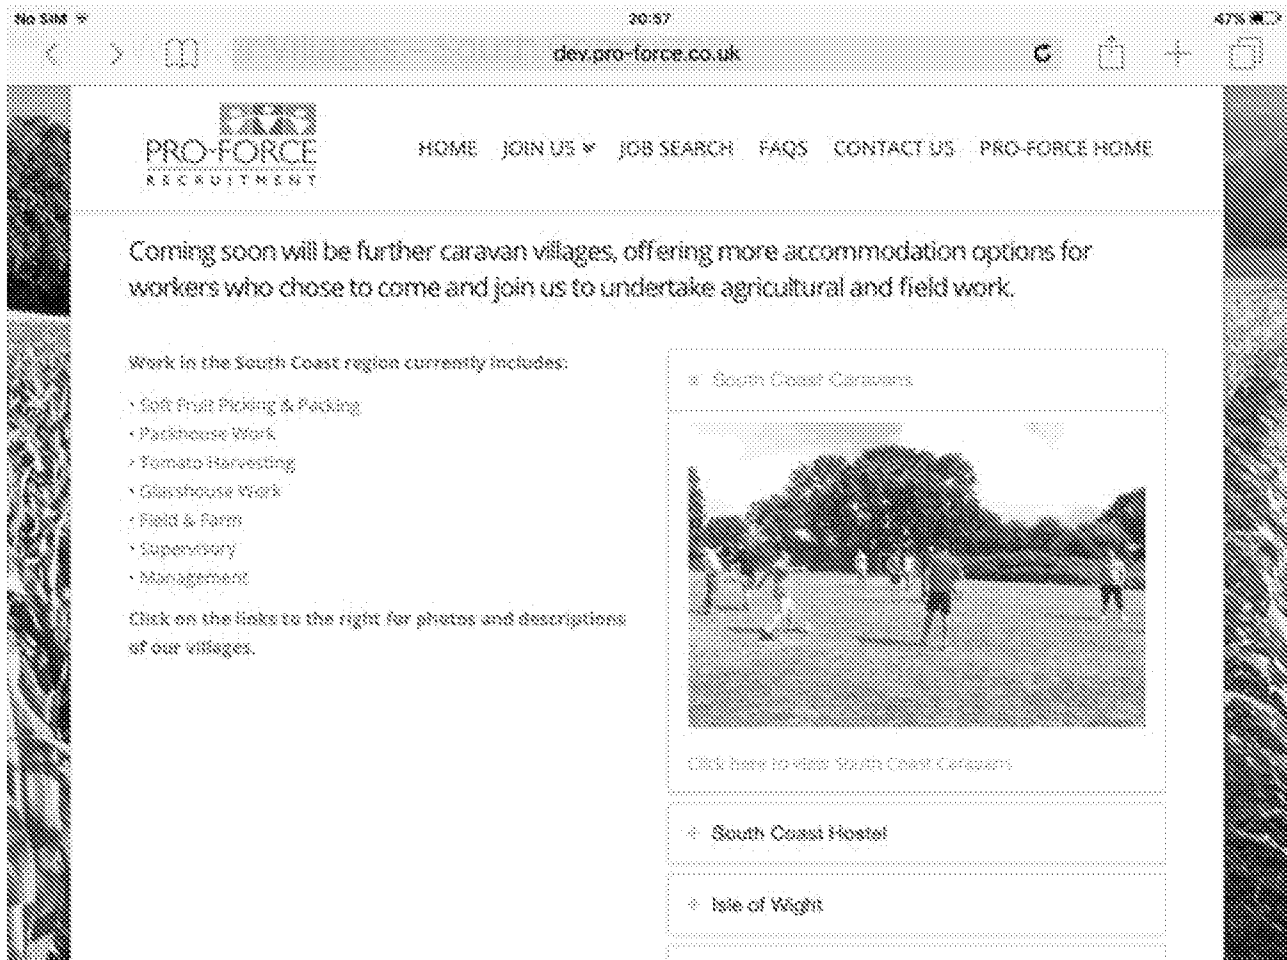

It seems rather presumptuous that this is the new workers village that Pro force will be building here at Lagness and are already advertising it and have apparently named it as South Coast Caravans.

This surely can not be built under Permitted Development rights. Calling it a village implies that this is permanent. This must go through a full planning application.

As you are aware the definition of village is: a group of houses and associated buildings, larger than a hamlet and smaller than a town, situated in a rural area.

By there own admission on their recruitment website they intend to increase the housing capacity on these facilities

This is far removed from providing temporary accommodation for farm workers to work on the same site the are residing on, as required by permitted development rights.
