I have to say that Walberton is a charming village, with the right balance between housing and green spaces consistent with being a rural village. I feel that the proposed development on Tuppens Field would severely change its character, and not in a good way. We need more homes, yes, but this is not the right place. It would not be consistent with Walberton's Neighborhood Plan, which defines a boundary for the built up area. I've read that some recent reports concluded it's not really suitable for development. That doesn't surprise me. How would the extra homes affect traffic in The Street? Being narrow, it's not an easy ride in many places if you meet oncoming traffic. Why not leave Tuppens Field alone? There are better places.
