Having recently moved into the area into a new build I have personally benefited from new builds. However in my work and having lived in Sussex all my life I have seen the green areas eaten up and disappearing. I can attest that there is no need for more builds - as even on our plot finished last year there are vacant houses still yet to be sold and occupied. Driving around the other new builds in the area it can be witnessed that a number of homes are vacant- so how can it be justified building another high number of them, on our rapidly disappearing green belt? Is this also not a farmed field providing towards our nations needs, not to mention the wildlife that thrive and survive in such areas? Also as a new local I can also vouch for how overloaded the local suppliers are such as drs and dentists - and the struggle to find places in schools and such as well, without this burden being stretched even more.
