Hi Simon,

Thanks for the quick response and that would make sense (obviously I would say that as I am working on behalf of the applicant) but appreciate you need to consider all the various connotations.

I have assumed that the Tree Officer would have had the power to TPO the tree(s) in question when the permission to develop the site was originally given. As this was not done I assume that the trees were not seen as to be so important as to preserve over and above that proposed by the previous applicant. Therefore theoretically the previous land owner could have removed the trees at any point before the permission was implemented at any point irrespective of the approval.

Being a fairly positive person I feel we are nearly there but please do let me know if you need any further information or there are any other points we need to review.

Thanks

Rebecca
