

APPLICATION NO: Y/83/19/OUT

This site lies on a part of the coastal plain that has been demonstrated to have been intensively exploited from at least the late prehistoric period, so it should be expected to contain structures and deposits of archaeological interest that might be harmed by development.

In the circumstances I recommend that archaeological potential of the site should be evaluated ahead of development in order to identify any deposits of archaeological interest that it might contain so that measures might be put in place to ensure appropriate preservation (whether in-situ or through further investigation). This process would be best secured following a suitable version of standard archaeology condition ARC1.

James Kenny
Archaeology advisor
05/11/2019